Elwood research team named best presenters

A team of Elwood-John H. Glenn High School student-researchers recently won the best presentation award at the Northwell Hospital-Feinstein Institute's annual Medical Marvels Competition.

This collaborative research competition is for ninth- and 10th-grade students across the Island who are seeking to pursue careers in the fields of science, technology, engineering and math.

Collaboratively, the students wrote a 14-page paper on the harmful effects of vaping and proposed a resolution to the high school vaping crisis across New York. After presenting in competition with 37 other teams, they were awarded the best presentation award.
