

Kaye is CEO of Reunion Rehab Hospital New hospital to open in February in Northfield

Reunion Rehabilitation Hospital Denver, which will open its doors in February, 2021, announced Erika Kaye, its new CEO.

Kaye brings 25 years of inpatient medical rehabilitation experience, clinical expertise and executive leadership.

She was most recently the vice president of operations at The Medical Center of Aurora and Spalding Rehabilitation Hospital with HCA Healthcare.

"We're excited to serve the Denver community and demonstrate our commitment to delivering an elevated standard of care," said Kaye.

"This new, thoughtfully-designed facility incorporates spacious social corridors where patients and loved ones can enjoy spending time between therapy sessions, which emphasizes our mission to put patients and their families first."

Kaye graduated from the University of Redlands with BS and MS degrees, and earned an MBA-healthcare management from Western Governors University.

She started her career as a speech pathologist and worked as a leader in rehabilitation departments across the country before returning to her native state of Colorado in 2006.

During her 15 years at HCA

Healthcare in Denver, Kaye provided executive operational oversight across inpatient rehabilitation hospitals.

She opened the very first burn unit in the HCA Denver market, which included overseeing the design, construction, physician recruitment, critical care integration, therapeutic interventions and program quality management processes.

She was also a graduate of HCA's executive development program. She won the COO Associate of the Year award, among several other local, division and national recognitions throughout her career.
